

The Internet is Keeping Us Happy

The passage “Is Google Making Us Stupid,” written by Nickolas Carr, he claims that the internet is causing our brains to become less concentrated and lose focus quickly. Carr states in the writing that, “Our ability to interpret text, to make the rich mental connections that form when we read deeply and without distraction, remains largely disengaged.” Carr's argument is that the internet might have negative effects on the brain's condition and take away the capacity for concentration and contemplation. Within the passage, Carr informs the reader that all concentration is lost because Google and the internet causes people to lose focus; which is not true in many ways. The internet and its tools can often channel creativeness and infirmity, which also helps adapting, replacing too accommodating the new situations we find ourselves facing in the world.

One of the ways the internet contributes to our body and mindset is that it can make us become more informative and creative. These attributes can be caused by maybe looking at websites that are devoted to making things such as crafts or “DIYs” or other projects to spark creativity, while reading website that have new or articles on them about politics, occurring news, or any information that might be useful to what we are doing or that could relate to our own lives. This is a way that internet and “Google” affect our minds in a good way.

Again, there are many reasons how internet and it's ways to make our brain more intelligent. When we go online to either find something about news or information to looking for entertainment like games or movies. The things we have read or watch can become a part of our memory which we could later remember if we are in a new situation that we need to know how to face. For an example, if a person is struggling with vehicle problems on the side of the road and you stop to try to help and the day before you watched many informative videos on fixing car parts or problems you could use the skills you learned from the internet to help fix that problem you have faced.

This is many ways and evidence that internet and it's tools are helping our mindsets and intelligence by stimulating it with new problems that we yet have come to face or just simple how to's we would like to know for the future. Nickolas Carr's perception on the internet and "Google" is that it makes us lose our focus and smarts, which these are very untrue in many ways proven. Internet makes our lives whole and without we would be far behind in technology, life, and in our families.