

The Transformation of Eric Borquist

After analyzing the bio of Eric Borquist, one can infer that he evolved from a talented, yet unambitious small townner into a driven military officer who prioritizes his work above personal relationships. Eric was born in the small town of Dry Prong, Louisiana, in December 1982. According to the U.S. Decennial Census, the population of Dry Prong was a mere 526 in the year 1980, and this small demographic would suggest that Eric was not wealthy growing up. At the age of 17, he became a drummer for the popular heavy metal band Crowbar, which shows his innate skills. Eric had great potential, but lacked direction and focus.

Due to his poor background, Eric struggled to afford college, so he decided to join the military. He assumed he would remain in the military for two years of peace and return to his normal life, enjoying his free education. His assumption was well founded, considering the fact that the United States had experienced a period of relative peace since the end of the Gulf War. What Eric did not expect was the 9/11 terrorist attacks. These acts of terror resulted in Eric remaining with the 75th Ranger Regiment until 2007. It was his time in the military that provided Eric with a strong work ethic and self-discipline, which is reflected in his dedicated pursuit of education and his increasing responsibilities in demanding government jobs. Eric attended Louisiana Tech University for 8 years, receiving both a Bachelor's degree in Mathematics and a PhD in Engineering Physics. Eric was also responsible for creating innovative technology for the DHS including the N.E.P.T.U.N.E and S.E.E.T.H.E. programs along with the POWER/VIRES Operational System. After Eric earned his PhD, he moved to New York City to pursue a job as Section Consultant Chief for the Port of Entry Security.

However, Eric's tendency to make work his highest priority had a negative effect on his personal relationships. In 2002, only 11 months into his first marriage, he and his high school sweetheart filed for divorce, which is likely due to the stress of marrying immediately after graduating high school and joining the Rangers. Three years later, in 2005, Borquist married another woman. Again, Eric's relationship suffered from his devotion to the military. His marriage was terminated only 15 months later. In 2011, he married his third wife; however, Eric was so dedicated to his classwork and work at the Department of Homeland Security that he did not have enough time to spend with his spouse. Only 6 months later, Eric and his wife parted ways. While the number of relationships suggests that Eric is a rather charismatic man, it also demonstrates his inability to balance work and personal life.

Eric currently lives at a nice brownstone house at 111 Archer Avenue and has a secure job. Eric Borquist has proven that he is a determined person, coming from a poor background in a small town, and working hard to live in a nice home with a good job in New York City. Because of Eric's constant life changes and interesting background, his profile stands out among the other agents.